WHAT THE DOCTOR SAYS.

I suffered nearly three years with my head. I had severe headaches and during the last year dizziness, pressure and throbbing in the brain. I have taken three bottles of Dr. O. A. Carlstedt's German Liver Syrup and my head is now well.

Mrs. A. S. JONES.

Tired, could not sleep at night.

From overwork I became nervous, tired, weak, exhausted and unable to sleep or rest. I finally took Dr. O. A. Carlstedt's German Liver Syrup and now sleep soundly every night from eight to ten hours. I am well and life is a pleasure.

HAD THE BLUES, AND GAVE UP.

Last February I felt very badly. I kept getting worse until I was almost mad. I could not love my own children. I was on the brink of suicide. Finally I got a bottle of Dr. O. A. Carlstedt's German Liver Syrup. That night, for the first time in months, I slept well and began to improve. Now I am well and a truly happy woman.

Mrs. T. O. Schmidt.

CHRONIC HEADACHE, NERVOUSNESS. I was a sufferer from chronic nervous headaches and sleeplessness. Life became a burden. I tried doctors in vain: finally I took Dr. O. A. Carlstedt's German Liver Syrup and I firmly believe it saved my life.

WEST POINT POSTMISTRESS.

An Official Whose Political Existence Is Not at the Mercy of Office Seekers.

There is one officeholder in this country whose political existence is not at the mercy of spoils grabbers, and whose tenure of office depends not upon the exigencies of politics. She is Blanche Berard, the venerable postmistress at West Point, the home of the military academy.

Administrations come and go; one party succeeds another in control of the government, postmasters and postmistresses appear and disappear, but Blanche Berard remains in undisturbed possession of her office. For more than a quarter of a century she has handled all the mail that arrives at and departs from West Point. During all those years she has hardly missed a day from her post.

No woman in this country has so wide a personal acquaintance as Miss Berard. She is known from Maine to California, from the lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. She has a warm place in the affections of every man who claims West Point as his alma mater. Gen. Grant never visited West Point without paying his respects to the postmistress; the rugged Sherman was a bosom friend, and "Little Phil" Sheridan, on his occasional visits to the academy, took delight in recalling cadet day reminiscences with this interesting character. Miss Berard has always been regarded in a motherly way by the cadets. She is keenly sympathetic; she enters into all their little troubles, consoles them, encourages them with her advice, and it is no exaggeration to say that many an officer-to-day wears his uniform because he heeded the advice and suggestion of Miss Berard.

Blanche Berard is over 70 years old. Notwithstanding her age, she is unusually active physically, and mentally she is as fresh and as vigorous as when in her prime. Miss Berard comes from a distinguished French family. Many years ago her father was professor of French at the military academy. When he died his wife, through the influence of the officers, was appointed postmistress at West Point. When she died Miss Blanche succeeded her, and has since been there.

Only once in her long career has any politician sought to get her comfortable little berth. It was during the closing months of President Cleveland's first administration. Miss Berard's commission had expired, and she never doubted it would be renewed. One day the press dispatches from Washington announced that the president had nominated a successor to Miss Berard. When the surprise subsided the president was surprised by protests. They came from everywhere, and from the country's most distinguished men and women. J. Pierpont Morgan, who is a personal friend of Miss Berard, it is said, went to Washington and saw the president in behalf of Miss Berard. The result was the withdrawal of the new appointment by the president.

When a young woman she was engaged to be married to a dashing young army officer. One day, preparatory to taking a horseback ride, he called to see her, and in turning in his saddle to toss a farewell he lost his balance and fell. The horse took fright and darted wildly away, dragging his unhorsed rider along with him. He died from his injuries. Miss Berard, during all these years, has remained true to her first and only love.—Chicago Tribune.

MESSAGES ON A SUNBEAM.

Sending Sounds Along a Ray of Light—Dr. Bell's Experiments.

When walking through the laboratory of the "Volta bureau" with Dr. A. Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, I picked up on one of the shelves a piece of pine board about half an inch thick and eight inches square, says World's Progress. Out of the center of it extended a speaking tube, which apparently rested against a thin disk of bright metal sunk into the opposite side.

This metal was like a silver mirror and was about as large around as the bottom of a tumbler. I asked Dr. Bell what it was and he told me it was a perfected instrument whose original construction enabled him to project his voice from one point to another through the medium of a sunbeam. It enabled him, in other words, to send sounds along a ray of light without the aid of an electric wire. He took the instrument and put the tube to his mouth, holding the mirror so that it caught the sun and cast a little shadow-disk of light on the opposite wall. Then by breathing slightly he made this shadow increase and diminish and assume various shapes by the action of his breath against the mirror diaphragm.

"That shows you," said he, "how the action of the diaphragm is carried along the ray. Now, if you will put a little bottle with some soot in it where that shadow is on the wall and speak into the tube you will find that the sound will travel along the ray of light, and by having a receiver connected with the bottle one would be able to hear what you were saying. We have spoken by this means to and from points 200 yards apart, and there seems to be no reason to doubt that speech may be sent along a beam of light for great distances. In our experiment in this we first used salenium, a very rare substance and very sensitive to light. We have found, however, that we can produce very good results with common soot, and the discoveries may yet be made which will make such an invention commercially practicable."

EDUCATING A CHEF.

The French Process Is a Lengthy and Tedious One.

The making of a man cook in France is a lengthy and tedious process. According to a celebrated French chef, a young man when he desires to pursue a culinary career selects his nominal instructor, to whom he pays a sum equivalent to five dollars.

The aspirant is first assigned to the vegetable cook, who teaches him now to prepare the raw materials. When he has mastered this he is initiated into the mystery of cooking them. This thoroughly learned, he studies the way of cutting up raw meats, of preparing fish, and how to stuff, dress, truss and lard game and poultry. When he has learned this he is placed before the range where he receives instruction in the various processes of broiling, frying, roasting and baking.

When he graduates from this department he passes under the control of the second cook, who reveals to him the mysteries of sauces and soups. The interest of this functionary in his pupil it is necessary to accelerate with liberal and frequent tips. The student is then put in charge of the pastry cook, to whom he serves a long apprenticeship in all that pertains to the concoction of sweets, pastries, ices and the like. This completes his culinary education, and he is prepared to assume the role of a competent cook.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Origin of "Teetotal."

The late Rev. Joel Jewell, a Presbyterian clergyman, revivalist and active temperance worker, is said to have originated the word "teetotal" in this wise:

When quite a young man, not then ordained, Mr. Jewell was conducting a public temperance meeting in Hector, N. Y. For the pledge against using distilled liquors he introduced the letters "O. P.," meaning "old pledge," and "T" for "total," the latter including both distilled and fermented liquors. When taking the names of those who had expressed a desire to sign the pledge a young occupant of a gallery seat called out: "Add my name and a T' for I am a 'T-total'."

After this the word "teetotal" was adopted by Mr. Jewell in his writings and speeches.

Joy for Carvers.

A Parisian house furnisher is now introducing a novel little appliance for the carving at the table of chicken and other small fowl. The new instrument is composed of a long, curved blade, to which a very much shorter blade is fastened in scissors fashion. This will permit the host to carve the chicken properly and serve the joints, and clip thin bones with the greatest ease and absolute absence of difficulty.
